A computer room usually houses a main computer, associated battery bank, switches, a central control panel, network cabling and a large control panel in the form of a breaker panel. Computer rooms were commonly found in large organizations, corporate offices, universities and sometimes even in some homes in the early days of computing. Many of these computers and systems are not used very often so they are kept in a drawer or a closet. In some cases, since these computers are not used very often, they are not even plugged into an outlet but may be connected through a network port. The lack of cool air in these rooms is not a problem because the systems are mostly air conditioned. A computer room can be useful to keep certain documents and records.
